18:00 The Madness of the Historian in an Archive by Malya Bhattacharya

18:15 Conversation with the Panellists.

Across Europe, borders are hardening, nationalist and xenophobic discourses are gaining ground, and the idea of a shared future feels increasingly uncertain. But could this uncertainty also create an opening to ask who gets to imagine Europe, whose voices shape its future, and what might emerge when those at its margins are given space to speak, create and dream?

Bringing together international writers, artists, poets, thinkers and academics, this conversation explores how literature and the arts can challenge exclusion and open up new ways of imagining Europe. Can stories create a language beyond nationalism? Can art help us envision a Europe not defined by walls, borders and fear? And can stories make strangers kin?

18:15–19:25 « POETS ON A LANGUAGE FOR LONGING »

For what remains in the shadows, for the fragments of the unspoken. Some things resist easy naming: memories that return unexpectedly, places we have left behind, languages we have lost or inherited, loves that linger, griefs without shape, desires left unspoken. How might poetry reach towards what lies beneath the surface, giving form to what remains elusive?

Bringing together poets from different backgrounds, languages and traditions, this intimate conversation explores longing, memory, exile, desire and the inner landscapes we carry with us.

With Radna Fabian, Nat Raha, Lisette Ma Neza.

Chair: Canan Marasligil

20:20–21:30 WHAT THE EROTIC MAKES POSSIBLE

Love, sex, tenderness and desire have long shaped artistic and intellectual life. The erotic brings these experiences into relation with an insistence on presence, pleasure, freedom, play, consent and mutual recognition, raising the question of what it might make possible in an age of fracture.

This conversation explores desire, vulnerability and intimacy as sites of imagination. Can intimacy become a way to reshape societies, offering new ways of relating to ourselves, one another and the worlds we inhabit?
